HISTORY

The Historical Buildings and Resources Committee (HBRC) toured the resource on August 27, 2014 and made the recommendation to add it to the List of Historical Resources on November 20, 2014 with the above listed Character-Defining Elements. It was deemed to embody heritage values attributed to the following:

1. The building was constructed in 1901, which makes it an early warehouse district structure. It is illustrative of the growth in this neighbourhood in the first decade of the 20th century;
2. Its original owner, the wholesale grocery firm of G.F. and J. Galt, were an early and influential company in Winnipeg and Western Canada;
3. The building is a good example of the popular Romanesque Revival architecture;
4. The building is a good example of the mill construction method with its solid brick walls and square timber and wood plank floor structural system;
5. It is an important contributor to its streetscape in the heart of the Exchange District National Historic Site; and
6. Many elements of the original exterior have not suffered extensive alteration.

The Public Service is taking action to conserve all buildings that contribute to important downtown commercial streetscapes that are within boundary of the Exchange District National Historic Site (EDNHS). Out of over 130 buildings that are nominated to be added to the List of Historical Resources, 33 of these are within the EDNHS boundary. Examples of these historic streetscapes that are illustrative of downtown development within the EDNHS and that include buildings that are nominated for heritage designation are as follows:

- South side of James Avenue, east of Main Street (Appendix C, Plate 1)
- South side of McDermot Avenue, west of Main Street (Appendix C, Plate 2)
- West side of Arthur Street, south of Bannatyne Avenue (Appendix C, Plate 3)

Anne (Blue Ribbon) Building, 88 Arthur Street

In 1901, this large brick and stone warehouse was completed in the rapidly growing warehouse district west of Main Street. Built as a factory/warehouse for the Blue Ribbon Manufacturing Company, a division of the early grocery wholesalers G.F. & J. Galt, it was unique in that it stretched across an entire block

This building is an excellent example of the Romanesque Revival style, very popular in warehouse districts throughout North America from the 1880s well into the 20th century. The buildings were nearly always solid brick with a raised basement and featuring rusticated stone accenting around windows and doors and at roof level. Other elements that could be included were towers flanking the main façade, quoins, belt courses, corbelled brick panels, chevrons and flat rooflines, with or without cornices and entablatures. The most prominent characteristic of these structures was the use of the round arch above windows and doors. Often, flat-headed windows located on the middle storeys were grouped under large arches on the upper floors. Although the style was applied to private residences and on large public buildings, in Winnipeg it was almost exclusively used in the warehouse district, where the designs were somewhat more subdued. The massiveness and sturdiness of the style appealed to wholesalers looking to promote their businesses and portray the stability of their firms through the design of the structures they occupied.

The two main façades, east and west, were identically designed and built in 1901. The east façade originally began with a rusticated raised stone basement wall leading to the cream coloured brick of the superstructure. The façade was divided into three bays, the outer two having paired windows on all four floors and the basement, the middle having similar openings on the upper three floors, the main floor held the large entrance with a stone arch above. All window openings were arched and featured radiating brick heads and rough cut stone lug sills. Above the fourth floor openings was delicate arched brick drip moulding followed by corbelled brick forming the cornice accenting the flat roof.

In 2010, the building was converted into Pan Am Place, a hostel-like development designed to help train and support at-risk men in conjunction with the Pan Am Boxing and Athletic Club, located in the neighbouring building at 245 McDermot Avenue. The building now houses training facilities in the basement, a kitchen and eating area on the ground floor and living space for clients on the second and third floors. The top floor is presently being converted into modern residential suites.

The building stands on its original site and appears to be in good structural condition. The building's north wall abuts the large Gault Building Annex, 92 Arthur Street, completed in 1903, the south wall faces a back lane and includes large loading doors. Alterations to the exterior have included the partial filling in of the main doors, the creation of new door openings and the construction of metal fire escapes on both main façades. The building continues to display many of its original elements, layout and materials. In August 2011, the Albert Street façade was painted and then in 2013, sculptured boxing gloves were attached to the building.

James H. Cadham, Ontario born architect, designed this warehouse. Cadham was one of a number of self-trained designers who worked in Winnipeg in the late 19th century, Cadham being one of the most prolific, especially in the warehouse district

The Historic Sites and Monuments Board of Canada has recognized the Exchange District as a National Historic Site. All buildings in the Exchange District, including 88 Arthur Street, are an essential part of the historic streetscape. This structure, used as a factory and warehouse and uniquely fronting on two streets, was completed just as Winnipeg began a frantic decade long expansion that would see it become the fastest growing city on earth. Much of this expansion was as a result of its development as the railway hub for the Canadian Pacific and later the Canadian Northern and Grand Trunk Pacific/National Transcontinental railway lines. Manufactured goods from Eastern Canada and Europe travelled to Winnipeg where they were unloaded, sorted into smaller loads and then shipped west to the growing markets in what would become Saskatchewan and Alberta. The warehouse district on both sides of Main Street north of Portage Avenue grew in response to this new role and sturdy brick and stone structures like the Arthur Building lined the streets.
