CITY OF WINNIPEG MB.

Dear Councillor Wyatt

Today 9/11, perhaps would be the most opportune day to request you to name a major THOROUGHFARE IN the name of the World Renowned MAN of PEACE, MAHATMA GANDHI. He championed a new ISM – a doctRINE of settling the most difficult conflicts with NON violence and civil disobedience. He was successful in disarming the most powerful colonial power of England. Today his statues enshrine the world, notably in London (U.K). NEW YORK, ATLANTA Houston, CHICAGO – SAN FRANSISCO – WASHINGTON (D.C.) etc. THE DALAI LAMA, DR. MARTIN LUTHER KING JUNIOR, CESAR CHAVEZ, DESMOND TUTU and NELSON MANDELA are among many children of his doctrine.

Today, more than ever, the world needs to follow his doctrine of PEACE with NON VIOLENCE.

Hope the above will justify my request. Thanks. With Regards

Jmann.

EDNA PERRY History 1

Dear Councilor Wyatt.

The success and growth of a community is largely dependent on the support of its citizens, be it volunteer ~~effort~~ or exceptional service in education or community dedication.

The community rewards its citizens in various ways eg. by naming structure or street.

Kanseona has many dedicated citizens and they have been recognized by naming streets.

I recommend that ~~Mr.~~ Edna Berry be considered in naming a street "~~Ro~~ Edna Perry".

Edna Perry is an Anglican priest and despite her handicap of blindness she continues to perform church services by memorizing readings and prayers.

Edna Perry has been a school principal for many yrs (Wayoata schools), a teacher, and is Legion Padre. Presently she organizes Remembrance services in her apt. Residence every NOV. and it has reached a large gathering beyond expectations.

As the Wife of a city councillor she was called upon to support and participate in many local activities namely;

- Founding member of Fraserburgh Museum Board
- Member of Library Board.
- Member of Home & School assoc.
- President of Women Sect. of the East End C. Club
- Past Principal of Central school.

ROD BLACK.

August 28, 2006

Dear Rod Black:

Yours is an impressive list of achievements. Through boyhood aspirations and a lot of hard work, dedication and determination, you have risen high in the world of sports through the profession of Journalism, and by doing so, you have not only impressed your friends and family, but you have also brought prestige and recognition to the community you were raised in, Transcona.

Furthermore, your commitment, and the commitment of your family and friends, to many charitable causes has illustrated your strong sense of community. Specifically, your on going dedication to first the Transcona-Springfield Education Foundation and now the River East-Transcona Education Foundation, through the Annual Rod Black Charity Golf Tournament, not only provides our community with a great sense of pride, but has raised thousands of dollars for the cause of 'Keep them in School', to assist our youth in their educational goals and career dreams. By helping them you have done more than you can imagine by making our community a better place to live and work in.

Though you have risen high, you have never forgotten your home and have always given back, time and time again. For these reasons, as the City Councillor for the Transcona Ward and a member of the Winnipeg City Council, it is an honour to inform you that at the next meeting of the East Kildonan-Transcona Community Committee on September 12, 2006, I will be placing your name, Rod Black, on the Street Name Reserve List. At the next available opportunity your name will be placed on a newly constructed street in the Transcona Ward.

It is my hope that this action will serve as a permanent recognition of your past and ongoing service to both Transcona and its youth. I sincerely believe this honour to you and your family has the full and widespread support of the people of Transcona.

Yours truly,

Russ Wyatt

THE GREATEST CANADIAN FRANÇAIS

TOMMY DOUGLAS

"My friends, watch out for the little fellow with an idea." - Tommy Douglas 1961.

For more than 50 years, his staunch devotion to social causes, rousing powers of speech and pugnacious charm made Tommy C. Douglas an unstoppable political force. From his first foray into public office politics in 1934 to his post-retirement years in the 1970s, Canada's 'father of Medicare' stayed true to his socialist beliefs -- often at the cost of his own political fortune -- and earned himself the respect of millions of Canadians in the process.

The child of Scottish immigrants, Douglas spent his formative years in Winnipeg, Manitoba in a home where politics, philosophy and religion were side dishes at the dinner table. His father, a veteran of two wars, worked part-time in an iron foundry. When money was tight, Douglas and his two sisters had to drop in and out of school as they worked occasional jobs to help pay the bills.

His family's socialist leanings were solidified after Douglas was hospitalized at the age of 10. Due to a bone infection suffered four years earlier, Douglas's knee required several operations - none of which were successful.

Without the money to pay for a specialist, his parents were told that the only option was to amputate their son's leg before the infection spread to the rest of his body. But before that could happen, a visiting surgeon offered to operate on Douglas for free, as long as his students were allowed to attend. The surgery saved Douglas's leg - quite possibly his life - and would serve as his inspiration for his dream of universally accessible medical care.

Not long after this, Douglas would witness firsthand the violent end of Canada's first general strike on a day known as "Bloody Saturday". In the summer of 1919, a teenaged Douglas watched from a rooftop as officers fired on participants in the Winnipeg General Strike and killed two men. The forceful and violent end of the strike further mobilized his dedication to the working man.

During his youth, he tried many different occupations: amateur actor, boxer and apprentice printer. Douglas found his true calling in 1924 when he enrolled in a liberal arts college run by the Baptist church. It was here that he refined his notion of the "social gospel," a vision of religion-in-action that he would carry through his life. Following several post-graduation years working as a minister in Depression-era Saskatchewan, Douglas made the move to politics in 1935 when he was elected as an MP in the Co-operative Commonwealth Federation, or CCF.

After nine years in the House of Commons polishing his fiery public-speaking talent, Douglas was elected the leader of the provincial CCF in Saskatchewan. With interest in socialism peaking in post-war Canada, the party won a landslide victory in 1944 and Douglas found himself an instant celebrity as the head of North America's first-ever socialist government.

Amid widespread skepticism, Premier Douglas mobilized aggressively, passing more than 100 bills during his first term. He introduced paved roads, sewage systems and power to most farmers and managed to reduce the provincial debt by $20 million. Over the next 18 years he weathered Communist fear campaigns and a province-wide doctor's strike. Elected to five terms, he introduced Saskatchewan residents to car insurance, labour reforms and his long-standing dream of universal Medicare.

But the years spent reforming his home province worked against him when he made his transition to national politics. By the time he was elected to the leadership of the newly formed national New Democratic Party in 1961, many provincial governments had already adopted many of his ideas, diluting his progressive luster. That, combined with a fervent anti-Medicare campaign by Saskatchewan's medical professionals, helped to deal him his first significant defeat in the 1961 federal election. The NDP won only 19 seats, and Douglas lost his cherished seat in Regina.

Douglas continued to promote his socialist policy through the 1960s, but never managed to secure the highest office in the land. The adoption of national Medicare and a pension plan by Lester B. Pearson's Liberals gave him hope.

He took his final and most controversial stand during the October Crisis of 1970, when he voted against the implementation of the War Measures Act in Quebec. The move was devastating to his popularity at the time, but he would be heralded years later for sticking by his principles of civil liberty.

He stepped down as leader in 1971 but he stayed on with the party. In 1979, he resigned his seat in Parliament and retired to a house in the Gatineau Hills just outside Ottawa, where he devoted himself to reforesting his land. He continued to make appearances at NDP functions where he gave his trademark speeches. Douglas died of cancer in 1986.

Tommy Douglas's legacy as a social policy innovator lives on. Social welfare, universal Medicare, old age pensions and mothers' allowances -- Douglas helped keep these ideas, and many more, watching as more established political parties eventually came to accept these once-radical ideas as their own.
