REASON FOR THE REPORT:

City Council approval is required to change the name of all civic buildings.

HISTORY:

In September 1973, Winnipeg City Council gave its approval in principle to a series of recommendations from its Executive Policy Committee on the construction of a new downtown library building. Plans for the Centennial project were made public in May 1974. Along with the park and the parking structure, the new library was envisioned as the major capital project for the City's 100th anniversary in 1974. The building opened in 1977 as the Centennial Library.

In 1997, the Library commissioned RPG Consultants to provide a facilities study of the Centennial Library. Based on this report, the Millennium Library Project was created.

In 2000, the Winnipeg Library Foundation received a commitment for $1 million on the condition that the name of the building either remain the same or only be changed to a non-personal/ non-business name such as the "Millennium Library".

In 2001, the Canada Manitoba Infrastructure Program approved the allocation of $9 million to the Centennial Library - Millennium Library Project, shared equally by the three levels of government. The Winnipeg Library Foundation committed to raise $7 million privately, and an additional $1 million was provided from the Community Services Department, Library Services Division's Technology Reserve Fund, for a total of $17 million.

DISCUSSION:

During the past five years, the fundraising efforts to renovate and expand the Centennial Library have often resulted in the building being referred to as the new Millennium Library. Promotional material has referred to the project as "Winnipeg's Millennium Library". Newspaper articles on the project have called it the Millennium Library, and the general public has heard the term used frequently to describe the project.

The Winnipeg Library Foundation has indicated that a $1 million donation has been given on the condition that the name of the building either remain the same or only be changed to a non-personal/non-business name such as the "Millennium Library".

Changing the name to the Millennium Library would add excitement to the renovation and expansion project. In the same way that the name "Centennial Library" was used to describe a period in Winnipeg's history, so too will the name "Millennium Library" help to describe a new era in library service delivery.

The new name will reflect the changes in service delivery planned for the facility. When the new library reopens after construction is complete, a new name for the facility will add to the public's attraction to this downtown destination.

There will be an environmental impact report prepared for the Millennium Library Project. The impact, if any, of changing signage will be addressed in this report. The name change should not have any other environmental impact.

There will be no impact on Human Resources due to changing the name of Centennial Library.

Additional Comments: Note, if the Centennial Library is renamed the Millennium Library, this would result in some minimal operating costs of approximately $1,000 in 2004 associated with the purchase of stationery material. There would be some capital costs of approximately $10,000 in 2004 associated with the purchase of new exterior building signage. The Library services Division would be able to accommodate these expenditures from its annual operating budget or as part of the project's capital costs.
