IMPLICATIONS OF THE RECOMMENDATIONS

Leisure collections are deposits of popular print material (e.g. bestsellers, new releases) that are established through public libraries and made available to students, faculty and the general public on university campuses to provide leisure reading material that is not generally part of the curriculum.

Traditionally, university libraries do not have funding to support non-curriculum based collections; yet, there is growing demand for leisure reading material by faculty, students and the general public who use those libraries.

Public Libraries do spend significant portions of their materials budgets on collections that support the leisure reading needs of its users.

By providing small, short-term deposit collections of leisure reading materials to faculty, students and public on academic campuses, public libraries benefit from a broader exposure of their collections and services to this user group who might not visit a public library. In addition, public libraries gain increased circulation and see an increase in new public library memberships.

Several public library systems in Canada have established similar partnerships with academic libraries to more efficiently share resources and meet the needs of their clients. The establishment of leisure collections has been done most recently between the Saskatoon Public Library and the University of Saskatchewan Libraries.

This pilot project would see the establishment of a Leisure Reading Collection of approximately 250 books purchased annually with joint funding from Library Services and the University of Manitoba Libraries. Each partner will spend approximately $3,500 on the purchase of new books annually. The University of Manitoba funding for this collection will come from a special endowment fund. Library Services' funding will come from within its existing materials budget. At the end of the deposit period, all the material purchased will be returned to Library Services for possible inclusion in its collections.

The University of Manitoba will also provide funding to purchase the shelving, marketing materials and signage for the establishment of the collection.

The material will be placed on deposit at the Neil John McLean Medical Library at the Health Sciences Centre on a deposit basis. At regular intervals the material will be integrated back into Library Services' collection for the ongoing benefit of its customers.

Library Services will use its existing book suppliers to purchase and catalogue the material to the public library standards.

The collection will be housed at the Neil John McLean Medical Library at the Health Sciences Centre and maintained by university staff. It will be checked out using the University of Manitoba library card system. The University of Manitoba circulation rules and fees will be followed.

Library Services will also arrange periodic visits to the Neil John McLean Medical Library at the Health Sciences Centre to familiarize faculty, students and the general public with the collection, register public library card holders, and provide other information about the services and programs of the Winnipeg Public Library.

If approved, the partners will work to have a signed agreement in place, the collection established and all policies in place for a launch in late March 2014.

The pilot project will be evaluated after the first year to determine its success and whether it should be continued and/or expanded to other locations on the university campus.

HISTORY

In the Fall of 2013, the University of Manitoba Libraries approached the Library Services Division with the idea of establishing a Leisure Reading Collection for faculty, students and the general public who use university libraries.
