		Additionally, the population in older, mature neighbourhoods declined substantially as the population shifted to newer areas.10 Reduced populations in mature neighbourhoods mean fewer people to support existing infrastructure and facilities, fewer people to volunteer at the community centre or participate in a recreation program." and that it be replaced with the following: "How Winnipeg has grown further amplifies the challenge. Like most North American cities, Winnipeg's urban footprint increased significantly relative to its population in the post-war years. From 1971 to 2019, its settlement area nearly doubled in size (an increase of 92%), while its population only grew by 37 percent.9 At the same time, the population of Mature Communities declined and in 2016, there were approximately 82,000 fewer residents compared to 1971. However, in the latter part of the 2000s, the population of Mature Communities started to grow again due to increasing rates of infill development, although numbers remain short of 1971 levels. Specifically, Census data indicates that the population increased by 4,630 persons in Mature Communities between 2006 and 2011.10 Like many other cities, this has left Winnipeg with an urban fabric that is increasingly difficult to maintain. With its budgets for both the maintenance and construction of new infrastructure stretched increasingly thin, Winnipeg is struggling to keep up with the needs of a growing city."
