We run a program that involves elderly people working with youth (Currently 20 elders and 15 kids involved), where both parties share their experience, knowledge, forms a bond and helps to shortens the generation gap. This not only helps youth to learn from elders but at the same time elderly people feel valued, heard, and connected. We as an organization are trying to make our elderly folks physically and mentally active by keeping them involved, valued, and loved. All the members (~150) help in cleaning, washing the dishes, take part in roti making classes, preparing lunch, attend music, cultural classes that helps and guides them as how to live the life, create a sense of ownership/responsibility towards the community.
