Comments in writing: Rather than entertaining any reductions to the flexible work program, the City should be seeking opportunities to expand the scope where appropriate, as per the reporting and feedback provided, work output has not suffered, and the City is making small immediate gains in lower administrative expenses - which could turn into much larger gains if footprints of leased office space could be reduced in the future (or headcount expanded without incurring increased costs on office leases), and finally - this is an avenue where the City can improve competitiveness in a tight labour market without incurring greater costs, either in cash coGrempensation or pension/benefit obligations. With so many programs/projects underway or proposed which will require spending scarce dollars, we should wholeheartedly embrace opportunities to provide value which preserve those dollars.
