Comments in writing: Early in my career as a professional engineer, I worked at the WWSTP in Ontario. The tech was different, but we owned the equipment. Winnipeg paid enough for the engineering and construction of our water facility, that we could own it. In whose interest is a scheme wherein a third party owns an essential part of this plant? The engineering company? The oxygen supplier? How did we get locked into this arrangement? Did we get an opinion from our auditors on this arrangement, before we agreed to those engineering plans? Will your new "construction engineer" be vigilant for this going forward?
