Comments in writing: Taking a city wide approach seems good, but no numbers are presented on what city policies do to the fuel use of the rest of us. Our cars use far more fuel or electrons in gridlock, and at 4 way stops, but that does not deter policy makers. As our city swells, that will get worse, but the report is silent on that.

That a few fuel uses dropped accidentally, and not because of "the plan" is nothing to boast about. Why not cut the inflow of rainwater into the sewage system?
