Comments in writing: Change tends to bring complaints. Small town transit tends to not require vehicle transfers. Huge city travel always does. We are between those extremes. When travel can be done without a transfer, you never miss your connection, even if you have to walk for a few minutes. Missing a connecting bus and your medical appointment can sour a customer's relationship with the city. That disappointment can last for years.

Have any of you seen a report on how Transit plans to mitigate this sort of occasional harm?
