Generally, this is a good report. There is one situation not mentioned. If a person leaves city employ, their email account will be cancelled. Doing so automatically, instantly, and with no possibility of data recovery can be a problem. If the employee is away on their last day, or is ill, important info may be lost. Leaving the account in limbo for a week is a more prudent course. If no alarm has been raised, and the employee has moved on happily, the need for that info will be unlikely.

I consent to being contacted to participate in potential public engagement related to this matter.
