Winnipeg has too many rules that serve no purpose. Want an example? The rules that punish big families having Sunday dinner that we were told would prevent rooming houses. They don't. You usually adopt building standards soon after they are approved by higher levels of government. Winnipeg trusts them. In this agenda item, it seems that you no longer trust the building code. Items dropped by Manitoba, by consensus, are being added into a custom-made Winnipeg building code.

Instead of making rules for pools, why are there no new rules to make new rental suites resistant to the migration of pests? Do your development staff not know of the need? Is this idea too new? Certainly it is not a matter of not caring enough!

I consent to being contacted to participate in potential public engagement related to this matter.
