An audit is not a simple math process. To be effective, an audit process must uncover what a skilled person has tried very hard to hide. To expect success, the city must not use cherry-picked bean counters and lawyers. It is essential to include those with careers and life-long devotion in problem solving and uncovering evidence. Those who have made learned and careful analysis of Council business would be far better choices. Several such persons have self-identified over the years, as delegates here. You must ask your selves: do you want to silence dissent and never hear about problems? Do you want to enable this new group to be effective?
